The Spring Garden, Vauxhall, occupying some twelve acres, was opened to the public shortly after the Restoration, about 1661.

At that time the place is said to have been a pretty plantation laid out with walks, and having numerous arbours; and that birds, including the nightingale, sang in the trees. No charge was made for admission, nor was a visitor importuned to spend money on refreshments. Pepys mentions being with his wife at the Gardens in May, 1662.

In a few years the Gardens became a place of popular resort, not only for citizens, but for persons of quality.
About 1667 music was provided.

Dean Swift, with lady friends, was at the Gardens to hear the nightingales, 17*th May,* 1711. Addison's "Sir Roger," in 1712 ("Spectator," 20/5/1712), remarks on the fragrancy of the flowers, the songs of the birds, and the loose tribe of people. In 1726 the Gardens were referred to by the newspapers as one of the sights of London.

In 1728 the Gardens came into the possession of a Mr. Tyers, who altered and improved them; and in 1732 they were reopened under the designation of Vauxhall Gardens, the charge for admission on the day of opening being a Guinea.

From about 1737 to 1792 the fee for admission remained at One Shilling ; afterwards on special occasions the charge was at times increased.

The silver Tickets or Passes in the above Lot were issued by Tyers in the immediate years following the reopening, and they passed two persons during the season for which they were issued. Several were designed by Hogarth for Tyers ; who presented the artist for his services with a life admission Ticket—struck in gold. (See "Numismatic Chronicle," 1856.)

Patronised personally by two successive Princes of Wales, the Gardens continued to be a popular resort for all classes ; the company, on fine nights, rarely dispersing before 2 a.m. The concerts included the first singers of the day ; and fireworks, balloon ascents and other entertainments were added ; as were, by visitors, the remarks that the chickens supplied were about the size of sparrows, and that a newspaper might be read through the slices of ham supplied by the management.

After the death of William IV. the Gardens lost caste, and were finally closed on Monday, 25th July, 1859.

 Mary-le-bone—earlier spelt Marrowbone, and more often Marybone—Gardens were situated on the site of what is now Beaumont and Devonshire Streets, Upper Harley Street, Devonshire Place, and Upper Wimpole Street. At their fullest extent (1753), the Gardens comprised about eight acres, and Southward extended to Bowling Green Lane—now Weymouth Street.

The Gardens were formed about 1659 ; they were referred to by Pepys in 1668. They included the garden of the old Mary-le-bone Manor House and the bowling-green of the "Rose of Normandy," and were known until the time of Queen Anne, if not later, as Long's bowling-green.

It was in 1738 that Daniel Gough, who was proprietor of the "Rose of Normandy," opened the Gardens as a place of amusement in the Vauxhall style, with vocal and instrumental music, an organ by Bridge, fireworks, rope dancing, a Great-room for balls and suppers, and other entertainments, as the newspapers of the day report.

Gough was succeeded by Trusler (died 1766*) and his daughter, who made the place famous for the seed and plum cakes and the almond cheese cakes supplied.*

Handel, a frequent visitor with his friend Dr. Fountayne of the Manor House School, supplied much of the music; and the artistes were some of the finest of their day. The Gardens became a place of popular resort of all classes, being frequented by members of the aristocracy as well as plebeian folk. Even the learned Dr. Johnson might have been seen discussing with an acquaintance in the avenues.

During the end of the seventeenth and beginning of the eighteenth Centuries, the place acquired notoriety for the gambling by the quality. Gay refers to the Gardens in his "Beggar's Opera"; and Pope to the Duke of Buckingham, who spent much of his time on its bowling-green.

The latter was wont to give a dinner at the season's end; and proposed the unvarying toast, "May as many of us rogues as remain unhanged, next Spring meet here again."

The silver Tickets of admission—now so rare—were issued by Gough in 1738–9, at 12/– each, and admitted two persons for the season. In 1740 the price was raised to One Guinea.

At that time the Gardens were about half a mile from the town; and the security of the neighbourhood may be gathered from the fact that as late as Trusler's time, a guard of soldiers and peace officers were engaged to conduct the visitors from the Gardens at 11 and 12 o'clock each evening as far as the Foundling Hospital; and in 1764 a reward of ten guineas was offered for the apprehension of any highway-man, or footpad, lurking near the Gardens.

After Trusler's time the Gardens gradually lost their attractiveness, and were finally closed 23*rd Sept.,* 1776. Building operations took place soon after.

The Mary-le-bone Music Hall now stands on the site of the "Rose of Normandy," once the entrance to the Gardens.
